

mkorp.

The brand guide for mkorp, the studio and portfolio of Mohamed Ismail.

Two directions, both built from the site's red pill.

A • Full stop Recommended

A monoline lowercase wordmark that ends in the red pill. The pill works as a full stop, which gives the name a calm, confident tone. It also works on its own as the smallest version of the brand.

B • Capsule

The same wordmark, enclosed in a capsule taken from the site's pill buttons. It reads more like a badge or stamp, and needs more room to work, so it suits stickers, merch and physical objects.

The rest of this guide uses concept A. Concept B stays in the kit as a secondary badge.

Wordmark, monogram, icon.

Wordmark. The default. Use it whenever there's room for the full name.

Monogram. For tight spaces, like avatars and watermarks.

Icon. App icon and favicon. Below 32px, use the pill-only version.

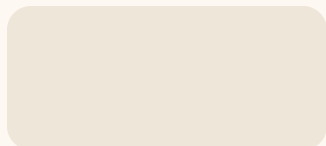

Clear space

Leave space equal to the height of the red pill around every side of the logo. Nothing else should go inside that space.

Minimum size

Wordmark 80px / 20mm wide. Monogram 24px / 6mm. Pill-only favicon from 16px.

Voice

Warm and direct, like the site. Write in the first person, keep sentences short, and lead with the work itself. Talk like you're explaining it to a friend, not pitching it.

Do's and don'ts.

Do use ink on sand or cream.

Do use cream on ink.

Do go all-ink when printing in one colour.

Don't stretch or squash it.

Don't change the pill's colour.

Don't put it on red. The pill disappears.

Don't add shadows or glows. Use the 3D objects for depth instead.

Don't rotate it.

Don't put the monogram and wordmark side by side.

The strokes become tubes and the pill becomes a capsule.

Hero wordmark. Ink tubes on a sand plinth. For the site hero and cover images.

Monogram coin. Two-sided token. For avatars, loading states and merch.

Red pill mascot. For playful moments like 404 pages, empty states and stickers.
